Thank God for that picture! It was more than a sermon to me. As I stand looking at such a picture, a man comes to me, "d says, "What are you garing at, sir?" It ye", in broken language, and with a feltering voice, to te" him what effect the picture, is having upon me; and he looks at me wift astorishment and says, "Well, it may be that it affects you so, but it does not stand to recess; for it is pature, to approach that if it affected you so, is would affect me in the cause way and I do not have any such feelings as you profees ") have. I am sure the sure of the stand tends in the cause way and I do not have any such feelings as you profees ") have. I am sure the sure of the sure of the stand tends in the sure way and I do not have any such feelings as you profees ") have. I am sure the sure of the sur

Next there comes to me a utilitarian—one of those men who think nothing good where it be useful, and with whom use means, that which is good to sell or to cat. "Is it possible," he says, "that this picture can operate upon your feelings? It makes no impression upon me whatever. I do not see how it can do such a thing. If you were to tell me that it was one of Raphael's great productions, and that it was worth five or six thousand dollars, I should nuderstand that it had some value. You are a little touched, are you not?" Then a bloated sensualist comes to me and says, "I would give more for one flagon of wine, than for all the old painted rags on earth." He and I live in different worlds. But if none of these could be made to understand my feelings in the presence of a picture, how much asked to do so, he says, "I can not tell you how it is. I only know that there is a glowing fire within me, and that my hand leaps forth to dash out these things that populate my brain."

He can not interpret to you the secret of his exquisite workmanship. So neither can an inspired orator tell the uninspired the secrect of his gifts.

How can a man who stands up and speaks living truths to living men before whom the heavens as as away; before whom the whole earth lifts itself up; to whom all things come, offering themselves as figures and arguments; who walks in the high places of the earth; who feels falling down upon him the very fire and soulight of heaven—how can such s man explain the power by which he is moved to one who has never felt it? He who has once felt it needs no explanation of it. And if men come to me and say—tempts of the men to get them of with screws and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the rain upon the mountains causes a great freshet, and upon the mountains causes a great freshet, when in upon the mountains causes agreat freshet, and upon the mountains causes agreat freshet, the and upon the mountains causes agreat freshet, when upon him upon him upon him or and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the rain upon the mountains causes agreat freshet, when sudderly they are lifted up, and carried over, and bave good navigation all the way to their destination.
